Source A: Young people’s participation in democracy in Northern Ireland

A report by the UNESCO Centre in 2017 highlighted the importance of young people (aged 15 to 24) participating in democracy. However, findings from surveys indicated the following:

- 2011 survey – around two thirds of the young people had little or no interest in politics.
- 2011 survey – young women had less knowledge and interest in politics than young men.
- 2010 survey – 56% of young people were unlikely to vote in the Assembly election.
- 2009 survey – around 50% of young people did some type of volunteering.

The report also highlighted that some groups of young people including those leaving the justice system, in or leaving care, young women and those who are lesbian, gay or bisexual may face barriers to participating in society.
